

Dedication

I am particularly thankful to all contributors of this volume, who are outstanding scientists in their field with long-lasting experience in the various fields of glaucoma research, that they have dedicated their papers in honor of my revered teacher, Prof. Rohen, who on the 18th of September will celebrate his 75th birthday.

Prof. Rohen, who has devoted most of his life to eye research and particularly to the problem of glaucoma, will certainly be delighted to see how science has progressed in the field to which he himself has made so many outstanding and pioneering contributions in the last four decades.
